

Community Development Intensive

Grassroots whole system approach

ICA is a leader in “grassroots” processes in communities and organizations around the world. When people work together to meet their changing social and economic needs, community development is successful and sustainable. The result is long term, locally motivated change. The Community Development Intensive equips practitioners for whole system change. The CDI is a five-day course that establishes community development as a whole system change. The key to community development lies in people working together to meet changing social, cultural and economic needs. The tools in this course have been tested through over 40 years in the field in many countries and networks.

After taking this course you will have practical tools and an understanding of the methods and approaches of whole system development so that you can:

- Ensure effective grassroots participation.
- Map assets and relationships of a whole community.
- Motivate multi-stakeholder groups to action.
- Develop a grassroots vision.
- Empower collaborations and partnerships.
- Analyze obstacles and create innovative strategies.
- Convert plans to visible, doable projects.
- Build and sustain long term relationships.

We can offer discounts for multiple participants from non-profit organizations like United Way and others.

Benefits:

- ✔ These approaches have been used world-wide to launch and sustain thousands of community based initiatives. They empower people to take charge of their own development.
- ✔ Methods of whole system development work for any of housing, education, health, social services, business, commerce, agriculture, industry, organization, culture. It also enables all of them to be implemented together, and can be used for networks and place-based.

How is this course different from other ICA courses?

- ▶ This course incorporates and builds on the philosophies and methods of ICA over 50 years in many countries. It looks at the whole system that makes up a community and applies methods of working directly and collaboratively in a community. This course, with a public schedule, can also be done with community leadership and volunteers to plan out, inspire and motivate commitment and action over the long term.
